

10 ways to buy less and live more

How to consume less

Brought to you by Life Squared

helping you to live well

Visit

www.lifesquared.org.uk

for more ideas and information on how to get the most out of life

Get in touch with us at info@lifesquared.org.uk

All materials copyright Life² 2013
Life Squared, 18 Hamsey Crescent, Lewes, E Sussex BN7 1NP
Reg number 7190658

live a happier, wiser and more meaningful life – www.lifesquared.org.uk

Check out the Life² website for more ideas and links to organisations that can help you to can live more.

The poster on the other side of this leaflet shows 10 ideas to help you consume less, so you pressure, how can we get into the habit of consuming less?

of the internet - are geared up to tell us we should consume more! So, in the face of all this of the messages we receive in our daily lives - including through adverts, newspapers and the resources of 3 planet Earths to survive. Clearly we all need to consume less, but many
We only have one planet, yet if everyone in the world lived like we do in the UK we'd need

How can we consume less?

How to consume less

10 ways to buy less and live more

1. Remember what matters

This is the most important point. List the things that really matter to you in life. Is a new iPad really one of them? Make sure you're spending your life on the things that really matter to you.

2. Time is money

Remember that you invest hours of your time - and your life - to earn the money that you use to buy each new thing. Could you spend fewer hours earning money, buy less stuff and use your extra time to do things that really matter to you instead?

3. Ignore adverts

Adverts influence us to want more stuff. Try to actively ignore them - switch channels when they're on TV, flick past them in magazines, and ignore them at the station.

4. Think critically

Be aware of all the other messages that can influence you to consume more, including peer group pressure, special offers in shops and newspaper and magazine articles. See our 'The problem with consumerism' guide for more information on this.

5. Mend what you've got

We find it too easy to throw things out and buy new ones. If possible (and economical), mend what you have rather than buy another.

6. Remember the impact

Even the most seemingly inconsequential item - from a lettuce to a paper clip - leaves a trail of impacts on people and the environment when it is being produced. Bear this in mind when you're working out whether you really need something.

7. Do you really need it?

When you see something you'd like to buy, ask yourself 'do I really need it?'. Don't try to rationalise your answer - just be honest with yourself.

8. Do something more interesting

There are many other things you can do with your time that are more enjoyable and fulfilling than shopping - from playing to chatting. See our leaflet 'Better than shopping' for more ideas.

9. Develop a sense of anger

When one realises that most adverts are just attempts to manipulate you to spend money, this can cause annoyance. Use this sense of annoyance to fire your determination to prevent advertisers manipulating you.

10. Use the money for something else

Think about better ways you could use your money than buying more stuff. For example, you could give it to charity or to people who need it more than you, you could buy some time to do things you enjoy or you could save it for another time.

